

THE CHINESE REVIEW

John Quinsey Wang, Editor, Published by The Chinese Review, London.

It is with much regret to learn the discontinuance of The Chinese Review which appeared in April, 1914, for the first time. That The Review was a success in spite of the shortness of its period of publication is evidenced by the favorable impression left behind by it in England. A great deal of misunderstanding in affairs of China was dispelled by the able editor of The Review. The general appearance of the paper is enough to show the gentleness of its policy. With its excellent English and its accurateness of expressions The Review showed its readers how much can the Chinese accomplish in mastering a foreign language. Its sure success opened a good opportunity for future journalistic enterprise in England. We hope the editors will be able to resume the publication in the near future.
