

The Under Groove. By Arthur Stringer.
New York: The McClure Co. $1.50.

The narrator of the adventures in The Under Groove, by Arthur Stringer, is a composite cracksman, possessor of a convenient double personality caused by a crack on the head when he was discharging his duty as a train-dispatcher. The combination of criminal and expert electrician is a good one for his business, but a very bad one for various banks and brokers. Incidentally, the story is lively reading, of a somewhat higher order than many of the "Rafflesiana" we have endured since that gentleman-burglar set the fashion for novels of excitement.