

CALIFORNIA SKETCHES. NEW SERIES. By O. P. Fitzgerald. With an Introduction by Bishop George F. Pierce. Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Pp. 233. 10mo.

After reading these sketches—some of them more than once—we can well believe that the first series was, as Bishop Pierce says, very popular and deservedly so. The same will prove true, no doubt, of this second series. They are brief, life-like sketches of character and graphic narratives of incidents in the personal experience of the author. All sorts of people come within the range of these sketches, and from each character and incident something touching, impressive, and worth remembering is drawn for the edification of the reader. Wit, humor, and tact in reading character, on the author's part, are revealed, no less than his skill in getting hold by a kind of magnetic power of the secret griefs and buried lives of the many remarkable people with whom, as a pastor, he came in contact. There is material enough in these sketches of early California life to make half a dozen romances. The author, as probably most of our readers know, is the Rev. Dr. Fitzgerald, the very able editor of the Southern Christian Advocate. A fine portrait of the author accompanies the volume. If our readers wish to laugh and cry—all in the same breath, so to speak—let them send for this little book. They will not go to sleep over it.

"English Journalism, and the Men Who Have Made It," by Charles Pebody, is the latest issue of Cassell's popular library. It is the most comprehensive and interesting account we have ever seen of the rise and growth of the leading English newspapers, and of the men who, as editors and publishers, have achieved such great success, and influenced British and European opinion so largely. Each of these volumes is furnished with a good index. Too much praise can not be bestowed upon these little volumes which the house of Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co., New York, are giving to the public. (Cincinnati, Robert Clarke & Co.)

Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., New York, have issued two beautiful "Easter" tracts. One is a collection of mottoes, Scripture passages, and verses, printed on a cluster of sheets cut in the shape of an anchor. Price, 35 cents. The other is the charming poem, entitled, "Daybreak," by Julia C. R. Dorr. Price, 60 cents. Both are for sale by the Western Tract Society.

No. 239 of the Franklin Square Library (Harper & Brothers, New York) is a novel by Anthony Trollope, entitled, "The Fixed Period." Pages 31. Price, 15 cents.

An American edition of Dr. Eber's "Modern Dry Plates; or, Emulsion Photography," has been prepared by H. Baden Pritchard, F. C. S., and issued by E. & H. T. Anthony & Co., New York.
