

in the Yacht 'Sunbeam'; not a personally conducted tour of Europe for $483, with Ober Ammergau thrown in and no

Copyright, 1910, The Century Co.
SELLERS OF ORANGES AND BREAD ON STANDARD OIL CANS IN JERUSALEM.
From "A Vagabond Journey Around the World."

extras except laundry. It is the plain but well-told narrative of how a University of Michigan boy worked his way around the world, a record of resourcefulness, energy and independence which proves that these American qualities are not extinct in the younger generation. Mr. Franck's itinerary, more or less involuntary, covers England, France, Italy, Egypt, Ceylon, India, China and Japan, but he has the knack of skipping the commonplace and devoting his lively descriptions to the more unfamiliar localities, and of these pages his experience as a circus clown in Ceylon and his tramp thru the jungles of Siam are the most interesting. Thru it all he stuck to his kodak, and the reader is very glad of it.

A Vagabond Journey Around the World.
By Harry A Franck. New York: The Century Co. $3.

Amid the host of conventional travel books constantly being published, it is refreshing to pick up one that is different. This is not an "Around the World